The special value in this case was due to the bird having won first premium at the Crystal Palace and other English shows. The value of thoroughbred fowls depends on their comparative of scoring. Expert judges compare each fowl with a standard of excellence which allows 100 points for perfection, and then deducts therefrom for every fault or deficiency that the fowl possesses. It requires careful and scientific breeding to produce fowls that will score ninety or more points, and such birds always sell at good prices Rare specimens scoring from ninety-six
